The United Nations University (UNU) is the academic arm of the United Nations (UN) because it bridges the academic world to the UN system.

The UNU-INWEH WLC Programme could be your next step towards professional development and improving water resource management in your country.

Do you have a desire to address issues related to water resources management?

Are you a young professional seeking to improve water management in your country?

Are you looking to gain knowledge about water management on a global and regional level?

Are you looking for a practical, self-paced learning experience through the United Nations University?

About the Water Learning Centre (WLC)

The UN Water Learning Centre* (WLC) is an e-Learning Programme of the United Nations University Institute for Water, Environment and Health (UNU-INWEH) that offers courses in Integrated Water Resource Management, Water-Health, Mangrove Ecosystems and Climate Change to professionals in developing countries who are seeking to gain or upgrade their knowledge of water management concepts and principles.

The Programme is of greatest immediate benefit to engineers, district managers, government administrators and others responsible for water management at the national and regional level; other individuals may take the course as part of a self-directed learning experience.

The courses are offered through WLC Regional Centres within affiliated institutions in East Africa, the Arabian Gulf, South East Asia and Central America. Successful graduates are awarded an academic Diploma from the United Nations University.

* Formerly the Water Virtual Learning Centre (WVLC)
 Currently under development

“Educational programming like that offered through the UN Water Virtual Learning Centre is unique not just within UN University, but the UN system as a whole. It fits in well with our global efforts to develop open-source and distance learning opportunities.”

- Prof. Konrad Osterwalder, UN Under Secretary-General and Rector of UNU
